Luxor for us shows, very successfully, the healing process of people who are trying to overcome their terrible pain - in a truly cinematic and pictorial way. In Luxor, the director escapes clichés and orientalist shortcuts in a surprising way, with an enchanting pace, delivering a film that keeps the audience intrigued throughout. A beautiful portrait of a woman, which echoes the city of Luxor. A city which in turn helps the protagonist by reconnecting her to the location's timelessness, to accept a possible rebirth through love.
